

Jamey Adirim

My name is Jamey Adirim and I finished residency training in psychiatry at Queen's in June 2019. Throughout my residency I always felt supported by the program directors, the faculty, and my co-residents. I think the smaller size of the program is a major strength of the program and leads to a tight-knit feeling of teamwork among the residents, as well among the entire department.

The smaller size of the city of Kingston also lent itself well to feeling a sense of belonging during my residency period. I've found life in Kingston to be relaxing and enjoy the feeling of community. Coming from a much bigger city, I hadn't ever experienced life in a smaller city and hadn't imagined ever settling in a small city. I enjoyed the city so much that I decided to stay in Kingston as a staff psychiatrist.
