

Johnathan Fairbairn

My name is Jonathan Fairbairn, and I finished residency training in psychiatry at Queen's in June 2019. I felt very supported by the program directors, faculty members, and residents throughout residency training. I found the smaller size of the program to be a real strength, as it encouraged a collegial and cohesive working environment amongst faculty and residents.

I found the program to be quite supportive of helping residents pursue their own educational objectives. I was involved in several administrative and research initiatives, and the mentorship I received from several faculty members was an invaluable experience.

The city of Kingston offers many opportunities for leisure, with a vibrant, historic downtown and wide variety of restaurants to choose from. It offers the lifestyle benefits of living in a smaller community, while being close enough to larger centres for weekend getaways.

I feel very fortunate to have had the opportunity to train at Queen's and would wholeheartedly recommend the program to future applicants.
